Special issue information:

Daniel Kahneman was awarded the Nobel prize in 2002 for his seminal work on prospect theory, the basis of behavioral finance. In this special issue of Finance, we wish to commemorate his work by publishing high-quality research papers in behavioral finance. The special issue will be devoted to the evolution of behavioral finance over 2002-2024. We encourage papers that provide insights into the diverse ways AI, big data, machine learning, and robo-advisors influence financial decisions.

We welcome empirical, theoretical, and methodological contributions that address (but are not limited to) the following research questions:

1. How is AI used to analyse and predict investor behavior?
2. How AI shapes new trends in financial markets and personal finance?
3. How machine learning models can identify, learn from, and potentially exploit cognitive biases in financial decision-making?
4. What is the role of AI in financial advisory services? How AI changes the client-advisor relationship?
5. How are robo-advisors changing the landscape of investment management?
6. How big data and AI are transforming behavioral finance research nowadays?
7. What are the potential dangers of relying on AI for portfolio management?

The submission process will be similar to that of regular articles submitted to the journal. The deadline to submit for this special issue is October 31, 2024. We expect all papers to be refereed within less than 60 days.
